

Surviving to Thriving

Did you know? Approximately 1 in 3 cisgender women and more than half of transgender and non-binary people experience relationship or sexual violence in our lifetimes.

Abuse is never okay and it is never your fault.

You deserve to feel safe and to be respected in all of your relationships.

Abuse is about having power and control over another person.

Abuse is serious and comes in many forms. Some forms of abuse include physical violence, sexual violence, financial control, threats/coercion, intimidation, isolating you from friends and family, or making you question your own experiences.

If you are experiencing abuse – support is available. You are not alone.

Need immediate support?

If you are in immediate danger, call 911. If you need to speak to a crisis counselor, advocate, need support, or to just need someone to talk to about an experience with relationship sexual violence, the following national hotlines may be able to help.

Surviving to Thriving

Healthy

A healthy relationship means both you and your partner are:

- Communicating
- Respectful
- Trusting
- Honest
- Equal
- Enjoying personal time away from each other
- Making mutual choices
- Economic/financial partners

Unhealthy

You may be in an unhealthy relationship if your partner is:

- Not communicating
- Disrespectful
- Not trusting
- Dishonest
- Trying to take control
- Only spending time together
- Pressured into activities
- Unequal economically

Abusive

Abuse is occurring in a relationship when one partner is:

- Communicating in a hurtful or threatening way
- Mistreating
- Accusing the other of cheating when it's untrue
- Denying their actions are abusive
- Controlling
- Isolating their partner from others

Specific

CONSENT

Consent is an agreement between participants to engage in sexual activity.

- Consent is the presence of yes not the absence of no.
- Consent is not if you want to, I'm not sure, or I guess. Someone cannot consent to sex if they are drunk or unconscious.

Consent must be freely given (no pressure/force/coercion), reversible (you can choose to stop participating at any time), informed (knowing what level of risk people are taking, for example agreeing to have sex using a condom is not the same as agreeing to have sex without a condom), enthusiastic (heck yeah, let's do that!) and specific (specific activities are consented to. Consent to one activity does not imply consent to another. For example, agreeing to oral sex does not mean someone is ok with vaginal or anal sex. When activities change, everyone must be cool with that change).

Without consent, it's not sex. It's assault.

Setting Boundaries

Boundaries are where you end and others begin. They're the fence you build around your physical, emotional, and spiritual space. You get to act as the gatekeeper, deciding who can come in, who can't, and under what circumstances.

Healthy boundaries help keep us safe. A healthy boundary should be easy to communicate, consistent, and you-focused. Our culture gives a lot of negative messages about setting boundaries. But the truth is, boundaries are not disrespectful, rude, selfish, or alienating. Boundaries are a necessary act of self-love.
